In Brief

Kick-off Saturday for Our Heroes Tree

A special kick-off event will be held from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Culver-Union Township Public Library, to launch the annual Our Heroes' Tree remembrance tradition to honor the service and sacrifice of military-connected families. From Oct. 8 through Nov. 11, the library will decorate a tree with American flags, yellow ribbons, photo ornaments, and more in honor of service members past and present. Those with family serving in the military are asked to bring a 3 x 5 inch or smaller photo. Details will follow. Contact Jon Gaskill or Cindy Good for more information, 574-842-2941.

Culver clean-up day Saturday

The town of Culver is sponsoring its town wide clean-up day scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 8, from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. A dumpster will be placed at the water tower on Lake Shore Drive. Please know that hazardous materials and tires will not be accepted. The Youth Community Organization will upon request come to your residence and bring your items to the dump site. Citizens may call Bob Porter at 574-292-3943 to schedule a pick up.

The traditional "blessing of pets" for St. Francis day will take place Sunday, Oct. 9 at 1:30 p.m. outside St. Mary of the Lake Catholic Church in Culver. All are invited to bring their pets for a blessing from Fr. Tad Balinda, pastor at St. Mary's.

Hydrant flush next week

The Town of Culver will be flushing fire hydrants during the week of October 17 to 21. During this process your water may have a "rusty" color; however it is still safe to drink. The hydrant flushing is done twice a year and is necessary to remove rust from the town's water distribution system.

From moonwalking to Fall Ball...Culver's parents' weekend

The 'king of pop' -- or rather, Michael Jackson impersonator Joby Rogers -- made Culver Academies' Epply Auditorium the happening place to be last Thursday, as Rogers took a packed audience through the years and Jackson's repertoire. Here his interaction delights several Culver Girls Academy students. The event helped launch Culver Academies' fall parents' weekend. Saturday evening's annual Fall Ball was highlighted, as is tradition, by the Officer's Figure (INSET*), with a full audience observing from the deck of the school's Recreation Building.

Gun incident is teaching moment for parents, students, says CCMS principal

By Jeff Kenney
Citizen editor

If there's a real lesson in the confusion following an incident a week ago Monday at the Culver Community Middle School, it's not so much in how to deal with students bringing a gun to school -- which didn't, in fact, happen -- as it is an opportunity for parents and students alike to become better and more informed "digital citizens."

As was explained to parents in an email sent by the school last Thursday, CCMS principal Julie Berndt says the incident had its origins in two students' arguments on the social networking website Facebook, which eventually led to the implication that one might bring a gun to school on Monday.

A student involved in the incident brought it to Berndt's attention Monday morning before school, and action was taken immediately, she says.

"Nothing was found," says Berndt. "The two who were involved -- we didn't know at the time that there was a third -- were down at the school office until I contacted their parents during the day."

The police were called (they did a follow-up visit the next day as well), as was Culver Community High School principal Albert Hanselman, who heads up safety for the schools.

Berndt points out the students were in the office and safety ensured before school had even started Monday morning.

Plan commission hears from county plan director on wind farm, jurisdiction

Staff Report

Ralph Booker, Marshall County Plan Director, joined the September meeting of the Culver Plan Commission to discuss Culver's two-mile jurisdictional area. Looking toward the future plans of providing building permits to be obtained on line, there are some parcels in Culver's jurisdictional area that are split between Culver and the County authority. The largest number of these parcels lie to the West of Culver and there are some who don't have addresses assigned. As Booker pointed out, this causes some confusion to anyone wishing to obtain a permit in these areas as to whose authority can issue the permit.

In August, the Culver Plan Commission agreed that the best way to determine authority was to use a percentage system. In whose jurisdictional area the greater percentage of the parcel lies, should determine the authority to issue the permit. Booker provided a map outlining Culver's jurisdictional area for review. Discussion had been held by the Culver Plan Commission to extend the two-mile jurisdictional area to SR 110 to the south after recent annexation of additional acreage on South Main to Tamarack Road was approved. Extension to the North to 16th Road was also discussed, but Booker noted that any further extension of Culver's two-mile jurisdictional authority would have to be approved by the Marshall County Commissioners. Booker will square off the parcels to the West based on area percentages and bring a map which would show the changes. Any alteration would have to be approved by the County Commissioners and the Culver town council.

Booker also spoke briefly about the proposed wind turbine farm. He said the County Plan Commission would have to approve the site plan and the County Board of Zoning Appeals would have to grant the

Council pressed on town manager hiring

Discusses outdoor food vendor regs, wind farms

By Jeff Kenney
Citizen editor

Culver's town council last Tuesday was urged by several in the audience to push harder to fill its vacant town manager position, even as council members explained some of the frustrations and intricacies of their search up to now.

At the council's regular meeting September 27, audience member Jim Hahn -- prefacing his comments with a reminder of his past compliments on all the council has been doing for the community -- cited several projects in recent months which he felt would have been less problematic had a town manager been in place. Specifically, he discussed replacement of curbs and gutters on South Ohio Street, sewer meter problems with Culver Academies, and a "pretty darn embarrassing issue" of an underestimate by $13,000 in costs of sludge removal in preparation for renovations at Culver's sewer plant.

"I think we need full-time project management," said Hahn. "I would encourage the board to find somebody as soon as possible."

He added he was disappointed in the council for not having its own town meeting regarding the controversial proposed wind farm in Marshall County.

Town clerk Casey Howard countered that she feels project management is going "wonderfully" in the absence of a town manager, noting she felt the problems Hahn cited would have occurred with or without that position being filled.

Culver's last town manager, Michael Doss, left the position in April of this year. Since then, explained council president Ginny Munroe, the town has been interfacing with town employees more, in order to monitor the several projects put into motion before Doss' departure, as well as working diligently to find a new manager.

"In the meantime," said Hahn, "the townspeople are paying taxes, and they expect a full-time town manager, and they and aren't getting one."

Audience member Russ Mason asked if rumors were true that the council is waiting until after elections are over this November, to which council member Ralph Winters replied he thought the council should do so, adding he didn't feel

Culver entrepreneur hopes success of idea she helped patent is meant to be

By Jeff Kenney

Jamey Baker with the portable high chair she helped develop.

It's been several years of waiting, but a Culver Community High School graduate (and familiar face at the school today) seems poised to see a business dream come to fruition.

Jamey Baker, who has worked the past four years in the CCHS bookstore, and is the wife of former school board member turned business teacher at the school -- and himself a CCHS grad -- Eugene Baker, developed the idea for Ciao Baby, a portable high chair, along with business partner Kim Strong. The story of their meeting and the growth of the venture has several Culver-related turns, and to Jamey Baker it also feels meant to be.

Baker notes late CCHS business teacher Mike Schwartz -- in whose stead her husband began working this fall, following Schwartz's untimely death from cancer -- had a big impact on her, and she pursued a business degree at Manchester College, entering into fashion retail. She was working with D.W. Wallcovering, located for several years on West Mill Street in Culver, when the company moved to Louisville, Kentucky. Baker decided to move with the company, and it was there, at D.W. Louisville, that she met Strong, and the two developed a business relationship which continues today.

The Bakers had moved back to Culver when Strong called about six years ago with the idea for Ciao Baby, which grew from a Thanksgiving visit Strong had at her mother's house with her three young children.

"They drug out this klunky, big high chair from

“We knew within minutes (everyone was safe). Then it was a matter of, how did it all come about and why? How it happened and who did what.”

The incident, she says, has the characteristics of a one-time situation in which tempers flared and words were exchanged without immediate thought to their consequences, which she feels is an important teaching moment for students and parents alike.

“It’s really easy in writing to say things that normally you wouldn’t say,” she notes. “I think it’s an important thing with texting and social networks to know those aren’t places for accurate information.”

a delay would be problematic.

“Don’t give the community the impression you’re not committed to doing this,” said Mason. “I don’t feel that’s the case, but a lot of people in town do...you can advertise (for a new manager).”

Munroe said council members were shocked that their top three picks for a new manager didn’t work out, noting there were “very legitimate reasons” they couldn’t hire the candidate they had expected to.

Audience member Patty Stallings suggested the council hire a “headhunter,” or professional in charge of filling the position with the best candidate, but council member Ed Pinder said the last time such an approach was taken , “it didn’t work out at all. We did a better job ourselves.”

He said the council poured through 54 resumes, but none of the top choices worked out.

“I hear you out there thinking we don’t want a town manager,” he said, “but we do. We can’t just hire any... person. Most people on this board would know more than some of the people who applied.”

Munroe explained the council met and opted to make street supervisor Bob Porter utility manager, over the water, sewer, and street departments -- an action they voted into formal existence later in the meeting -- in order to get a better handle on the structural affairs of the town. She agreed to the notion of re-advertising for the position.

The council voted to advertise for the position, later in the meeting.

Tree reimbursement

In other actions, the council voted not to reimburse Culver resident Anne Duff for the cost of removing a town-owned tree which fell onto her house last June. This followed an explanation from Mike Stallings of Culver’s tree commission, who detailed what Culver’s existing ordinances say about the matter.

Property owners aren’t allowed to remove trees or prune limbs larger than three inches in diameter, when the trees are growing on town-owned property, such as the street-side right-of-ways throughout town, said Stallings. Owners bear financial responsibility for major trimmings or removal of such trees, he added. He noted that while Porter is given authorization for emergency tree removal, such as following last June’s heavily damaging storms, neither his budget nor the tree commission’s could begin to cover the cost of maintenance and removal of trees throughout town as needed.

Some 10 to 12 trees have been removed so far this year via the commission following a professional arborist flagging them as rotten or hazardous, Stallings noted. Winters added the vote to deny reimbursement was “with reluctance.”

Special Use as required by the Marshall County Zoning Ordinance. He did advise that one member of the County BZA has already signed a contract with developers so would not be able to vote on the issue. A new law, that went into effect July 1, allows an alternate member to be appointed to the BZA or Plan Commission if conflicts of interest would prevent enough members for a quorum to vote on the issue. The law also allows appointment to the boards of a person who owns a business in the jurisdic-

That may go for adults as well as students. The school, Berndt says, received four phone calls and two emails asking about the incident, but rumors were already spreading -- some via social networks -- and information was sometimes inaccurate. That’s part of what prompted Berndt to send all middle school parents an email Thursday morning to clarify the matter, though inaccuracies have still persisted in the “virtual” world.

Berndt encourages parents to call, email, or stop by the school with any questions, “to get the facts.” She also assures parents the school has a thorough safety policy anticipating incidents of genuine concern.

West shore culvert delays

Porter updated the council on delays in replacing a culvert at the Lake Maxinkuckee outlet on West Shore Drive, where multiple days’ delays have caused traffic to be rerouted, to the consternation of some residents.

He explained a gas line placed across the old pipe was in a different location than expected, likely due to the sagging of the culvert itself over time, which has forced delays in the work.

Wind farm controversy

Munroe raised the issue of the wind farm proposed to be placed near Culver and surrounding areas by a Florida-based energy company, a matter about which some audience members had asked the council to take an official stand at a previous meeting, echoing Culver’s park board’s formal opposition to the proposal.

Munroe said she felt “pretty strongly” that municipalities and organizations should take a stand on the issue in order to send a message to members of Marshall County’s Board of Zoning Appeals, which will vote on the project when and if it’s formally proposed. Some had suggested the council shouldn’t address the proposal since placement of the wind turbines would fall outside the town limits, and thus out of the council’s official jurisdiction.

“It’s a really important issue to Culver and at the county level,” said Munroe, “and I personally am not thrilled about the fact these (wind turbines) could happen. Our number one asset in terms of the environment is the lake. If these can be viewed on the lake, I have a problem with that, besides the other issues that are related, one being they don’t benefit Culver in any way. Though this is a county decision, we represent a segment of this county. In many ways, I feel we should speak for the citizens of Culver.

“I would encourage as many citizens as possible to speak to the county about it,” she added.

Hahn noted an online Pilot News poll shows over 60 percent of respondents are against the wind farm proposal.

Pinder reasserted his opposition to the turbines as well. “I hate to see them take farm land away from the farmers and stick a monstrosity in place of farming with corn or soybeans.”

He added government subsidies funding similar projects in other states appear to be drying up.

It was decided at the previous council meeting that there was not enough agreement on the issue among members for the entire council to take a formal position.

Outdoor food vendors discussed

tional area even though the person does not vote in that district.

In other business, a site plan was approved unanimously for the Culver Educational Fdn. to convert the former Officers' Club at 121 N. Terrace into a walk-in medical facility for CEF's faculty and staff. Jeff Kutch presented the plan and said there are no plans for major additions to the residence, just making it handicap accessible. The facility will be open through the day and staffed for walk-in patients from the Academies.

Rich West, executive director for the Culver Cove Owners' Assoc., was present to discuss a letter of violation received from Russ Mason, building commissioner. Mason, at the direction of the Culver Plan Commission, wrote the Cove's Owner Assoc. to request barriers blocking ingress and egress from Plymouth Street be removed. In the original Planned Unit Development agreement with the town, Plymouth Street was to remain accessible for emergency and safety issues. The barriers are planters made of concrete but can be moved West explained. He told the commission that for the safety of their residents, the barriers were installed. Since the onset of the Golf Cart ordinance, underage drivers, as well as other vehicular traffic were using the Plymouth Street entrance as a short cut and there had been many "near misses of serious injuries". West spoke to Marshal Wayne Bean and Fire Chief Mike Grover who both agreed the barriers could be removed or driven over in an emergency.

“Had there been an obvious danger, we would have followed safety measures. We have “Emergency Procedures” safety manuals that we follow with regards to who to contact and what to do.”

Berndt and teachers at the school used the matter as fodder for conversation and guidance last Friday, as teachers discussed it with students and emphasized the importance of thinking through what’s posted online or texted. She also hopes parents will take an active interest in monitoring their children’s use of technology, communicate with them, and be aware of who they’re speaking to and how.

Audience member Jean Rakich asked the council to consider an ordinance governing outdoor food vendors in Culver, most specifically two barbecue businesses which appeared here over the summer. She cited the presence of smoke “billowing through town” from the vendors, and the effect it must have on neighbors.

Munroe said one restaurant owner approached her from a business perspective about the vendors.

“They (indoor restaurant owners) have to fill out all these restaurant rules and permits...you can get health permits and so on to do this (sell barbecue outdoors, more easily). We have no ordinance not to do it, but we have to decide what we want to do about it.”

Police chief Wayne Bean asked the council to consider the regularity of use in town of a company which rents out its port-a-pit equipment to local schools and charities for fund raising, before constructing the ordinance.

Howard noted the vendor regularly selling barbecue at the corner of Lake Shore Drive and Lakeview Street brought in his legal permits to show the town.

Also discussed was whether the town would follow up on properties in Culver -- specifically on South Ohio Street -- with multiple vehicles in the yard, something Culver police chief Wayne Bean said is being worked on.

Metering agreement and other matters

Howard updated council members on a proposed agreement between the town and Culver Academies regarding metering of its sewage outflow to the town plant. Changes requested at the last meeting regarding billing procedures were made, she said, and council members approved the document pending agreement from Academies Facilities director Jeff Kutch.

The council suspended second and third readings to pass on final reading an ordinance to change street supervisor Bob Porter’s title to Utility Manager and increase his pay, reflecting his ongoing increased duties in the absence of a town manager.

Winters noted the position’s pay will be split between the motor vehicle, water, and wastewater funds.

Approved was Porter’s request for $7,000 for purchase of 50 more new water meters to replace older, more difficult to use meters gradually being phased out around town.

Also approved was $900 for recertification of a study of Culver’s income conducted two years ago, in order to keep the town in the running for a water utility planning grant applied for via the town’s grant writer Shannon McLeod. Munroe was also approved to sign a recently-changed form, also towards the hoped-for grant.

Commission members remained firm in the necessity of abiding by the original PUD agreement particularly in the event of an emergency pointing out that time was of the essence and an ambulance crew should not have to remove barriers to access the property. The commission asked that the barriers be removed by October 15th and agreed to meet with a committee of Cove owners to discuss alternatives in the spring of 2012.

Mason reported that project costs to date for building in Culver had reached $18,974,663.64 and permit fees collected were $21,082.80. The review of Culver's Comprehensive Plan was again discussed. Grant possibilities exist for funding the review and possible revising, but there is a strict time line. William Cleavenger, chairman, agreed to put it on the October agenda to form a sub committee to explore the issue.

Letters to the editor

Wind farm risks too high

As a sailor, I support the idea of generating energy from the wind rather than fossil fuels. However, the potential damage of the proposed wind turbines in Marshall and Fulton County far outweigh any benefits.

There is significant documentation that wind turbines cause destruction of birds and bats, as well as caused negative effects upon livestock. More importantly, medical research has produced statistics showing alarming negative effects upon people. The noise from rotating blades, reportedly heard over long distances, plus the shadow flicker of moving blades have both caused problems for people, which has come to be known as “Wind Turbine Syndrome”.

While the impact on people and animals concerns me the most, the economic impact is worth noting as well. While a few property owners will benefit from the income, all property owners will suffer a loss in property value. In addition, this project would not be economically viable for NextEra if not for the huge tax subsidies. What happens to the project when those tax subsidies end?

Wind energy is a good thing, but not in Marshall County. I strongly urge the Marshall County Board of Zoning Appeals to deny the permit for these turbines.

Another ‘no’ vote

Dear Editor,

We are extremely upset with the possibility of “Wind Farm Turbines” being placed in Marshall County. We have thoroughly read the pros and cons of these turbines and cannot see what possible good they would do for Marshall County.

We have a summer home in Culver and can’t imagine sitting at the beach...in our beautiful park or go for a boat ride having to look at these ugly wind turbines.

Please don’t allow this to happen.

Nighttime rituals

Do you remember the joy of a great bedtime story when you were a child?

Whether the words drifted to a far away place, spoke of suspense and danger, or resulted in heart stopping laughter, clinging to every sentence, spun by a person you loved and admired, concluded the day perfectly.

Health conscience parents and adults constantly monitor the well-being of the children God had entrusted to them. Most of us diligently oversee nutrition, rest, education, activity and spiritual growth, but a good bedtime routine for children may be one of the healthiest initiatives we can establish.

Nighttime rituals for children provide consistency at the end of the day. Rituals need not take place every night, but with enough pattern to be predictable. With my children, tag team wrestling was in vogue. I know, I know, rowdy behavior hardly seems nighttimeish, but for us, hard playing, coupled with laughter and high pitched fervor was the pre-ingredient to a warm bath before bed. Waverly and Landrum cunningly attempted to avoid my deadly cradle-hold move, often tagging out at just the right moment to avoid entrapment. At the nick of time, before one or both of them suffered crippling injury, I would wisely announce a conclusion of the match, prompting them to take their warm baths while I attempted to create the beginning of a bedtime storyline. Rarely would I concoct the ending of the story, but if I could at least provide a great opener, all would be well.

My evolutionary twist as storyteller produced multidimensional characters common to my children, primarily from the barnyard animal kingdom and woodland critters observed on various creek banks during canoe trips together. Supernatural becoming commonplace permeated most plots. A chubby pig foot-racing Waverly on the Appalachian Trail seemed plausible. Clumsy blue herons attempting daring four-wheeler stunts with Landrum resonated with normalcy. And the wise omniscient owl befriending Graysen on a nightly basis ensured comfortable security after a day of growing up.

Even our beloved relatives starred in various episodes. Will my children ever forget the visual of Grandma Neer racing them in a nip and tuck, infraction-laced contest across Lake Maxinkuckee? Probably never! I hope not.

Final goodnight hugs and kisses, followed by prayers of thanks to God for giving life and blessings, hopefully harvested gratitude. Praying for others while acknowledging their own dependency for personal kindness, wisdom and achievement warranted trust in an eternal God.

Occasionally I would fall asleep next to my children, attached instinctively to their content restful breathing as their busy day came to a close. What a precious role to be a trusted parent.

Give your children the start of a healthy day the night before. A good ole tooth brushing followed by your own branding of family tradition and lore provides nourishment and wellness to the soul.

Many healthy children end their day with “Once upon a time.”

Culver major headlines of 50 years ago this month

As some readers are aware, your editor -- in his “spare” time -- has been part of a project spearheaded by the Antiquarian and Historical Society of Culver, with the cooperation of the Pilot News Group and Culver Citizen, to digitize (that is, scan into a computer for full-text searching capabilities) and place on the internet the archive of past issues of this newspaper. An announcement will likely appear in the Citizen in coming weeks launching the website with the first batch of those newspapers, which includes the years 1960 through 1969, a range chosen for various reasons.

Our “If these walls could talk” historical series should -- if space allows -- resume next week, but this week, I couldn’t resist sharing some stories from five decades ago in the general ballpark of this month.

The August 23, 1961 Citizen reported that the latest issue of Indiana Business and Industry’s annual salute to the Hoosier state’s outstanding banking and financial institutions, featured a “striking new oil portrait” of State Exchange Bank president (and local legend) W.O. Osborn, in fill color on the cover, which described him as “America’s most fabulous country banker.”

Distinguished Indianapolis artist Edmund Brucker was photographed working on the iconic portrait.

The same edition, Aug. 23, reported that 120 students and four teachers from the North Bend Township school (in Starke County) would be transferred to the planned-for Culver-Union Twp. school (which was eventually named Culver Community Schools, of course).

While the controversial merger -- part of a statewide consolidation of school systems -- was several years away, a number of heated meetings took place in the years prior to the actual creation of the Culver Community Schools corporation in 1968, which also incorporated the Monterey and Aubbeennaubbee (Leiters Ford) schools.

The Aug. 29 Citizen noted shorts and girls’ slacks were taboo for incoming Culver High School students, and proudly proclaimed 16-year-old Carolee Easterday swam the length of Lake Maxinkuckee in one hour and 57 minutes, a new record according to the Citizen’s files.

The Sept. 6 edition reported the creation of a new, 2 million member United Church of Christ denomination, merging of the Congregational Christian Church and the Evangelical and Reformed Church, which grew out of German Protestantism.

The move specifically affected Grace church in Culver, which had been part of the latter tradition, and of course became a UCC church as it is today. Later in the 1960s would see the controversial merger of the Evangelical United Brethren Church and Methodist Episcopal denomination into the United Methodist Church, which brought no small amount of controversy here in Culver and elsewhere.

The Oct. 4 Culver Citizen reported on a new grant (funded by the Morris and Oare Foundations) which would underwrite 1,700 public school students from across Marshall County attending the world-class concert series offered at Culver Military Academy’s Eppley Auditorium. The debut concert was the Harry Belefonte folk singers. $7,500 paid for four performances for year for three years. Many Culverites of a certain era will recall being bused from the public school to the Academy campus for matinee shows there, in later years.

Fast-forwarding to the Nov. 22 edition, it was reported the Academy had purchased an 81-acre tract from local farmer Judson Dillon, bordering highways 17 and 10.

The land, of course, has for years been the sporadic home of Culver’s Black Horse Troop for grazing and exercise. It was officially named in honor of late horsemanship head ‘Sarge’ Hudson a few years ago.

Also in the Nov. 22 paper, it was reported Jerome Zechiel purchased the Culver skating rink from Mr. and Mrs. Donald Grothaus (who moved to Pheonix, Ariz.) on west Jefferson Street. The building, which today houses Culver Communications, was planned for Zechiel to move his farm service business there. Zechiel would, in the 1980s, open The Parlor, a popular pool hall and arcade, on North Main Street.

Massive mushroom

It's that time of year again, when the woods and grasslands around Culver sprout giant "puffball" mushrooms. Even by oversized puffball standards, this super-sized 'shroom found by Bill Furry in the back yard of his and wife Krista's home on the east shore of Lake Maxinkuckee, is huge. At press time, the Furrys were planning to cook up the delicacy and eat it -- no doubt they'll have leftovers to last a few days!

The late granddaughter of a longtime Culverite is at the heart of a new, Indianapolis-based initiative to battle HPV and cervical cancer.

Twenty-three-year-old Kristen Forbes -- granddaughter of Phyllis Lindvall of Culver and daughter of Brenda Lindvall Forbes of Noblesville, Indiana -- lost her life to HPV-caused cervical cancer, spurring her father, Kirk Forbes to write the regionally lauded book, "Love, Kristen: One young woman's courageous battle against cancer" about his daughter's struggles. That book, and Forbes' story, were profiled in the Culver Citizen last year.

Last month, the Kristen Forbes EVE Foundation, Marion County Public Health Department, and the Indiana Fever WNBA basketball team joined forces to fight HPV and cervical cancer, an effort punctuated by Forbes' story. At a recent Indiana Fever basketball game, the Marion County Public Health Department (MCPHD) which sponsored the evening made the announcement it has chosen

Culver at the 'Trail'

They might not be dressed as Culverites are accustomed to seeing them, but Susan and Dave Beggs -- of Culver's hardware and Main Street Manor Bed and Breakfast -- were on hand last month for the annual Trail of Courage festival in Fulton County, in period costume and surrounding by period items.

This year's event was particularly relevant to the Culver-Lake Maxinkuckee area, as the annually honored Potawatomi family was that of the 1830s chief Nas-waw-kay, who lived on the east shore of Lake Maxinkuckee. Culver Pipes and Drums also participated in the event, which no doubt saw other Culverites in both participatory and observing roles.

At the arena entrance fans were welcomed by a life size poster with Kristen's photo along with Indiana Fever Guard Jeanette Pohlen. Kirk and Brenda Forbes and Virginia A. Caine, M.D., director of the MCPHD, delivered the game ball to the referee. During the halftime break, several thousand Indiana Fever fans viewed the 30 second PSA video "Every Shot Counts". ## Cavs fall to Jimtown Jimtown scored three touchdowns in the second quarter for an eventual 35-14 Northern State Conference win over Culver at Jimtown Friday.

The Jimmies snapped a 7-7 tie with a touchdown off an 84-yard kickoff at the 10:18 mark of the second frame and never looked back in the win.

Micah Budzinski scored Culver's first touchdown on a 6-yard fumble return at the 10:32 stop of the second quarter to knot the game at 7-all with Collin Stevens' PAT.

Stevens ran in a one-yarder for Culver's final score of the night at the 1:50 mark of the fourth to bring the score to its final.

Stevens led Culver in rushing with 66 yards on 14 rushes while passing at a 4-for-10 clip. Kevin Hogan recorded 58 yards on 20 carries in the loss, which drops Culver to 4-3 on the year and 3-2 in the NSC.

earnest until August.

"I'm all caught up, as far as the injury goes," she said.

"Now it's a matter of doing harder workouts and getting ready for the big meets at the end of the season."

Banfich led her No. 22-ranked Princeton teammates to an eighth-place finish with 268 points.

Notre Dame's women were fifth in the blue division with 210 points. Florida State's women won with 54.

The Irish ran in a nice pack, with Jessica Rydberg covering a soggy 5,000-meter course in 17:33 for 25th place.

Susanna Sullivan was 29th (17:38) and Alexa Aragon 32nd (17:40).

"Nobody had a great race, but it was a nice group effort," said Irish coach Tim Connelly.

Banfich, who earned All-America honors last season, was cheered by lots of friends and family members along the course. She said she could pick out their voices.

"I can always pick out (Culver Academies coach Mike) Chastain," said Banfich. "You can't miss it."

Another former Culver Academies star, Alejandro Arroyo, ran in the men's blue division 5-mile race and finished 128th overall, clocking 25:47.

Brigham Young won the men's title, while Princeton was third. Notre Dame placed 11th.

NOTRE DAME — Alex Banfich says she has recovered from the illness and hamstring problems that disrupted her training much of the summer.

Now, if she could just get her stamina back, she'd be all set.

"Yeah, I didn't quite have it today," said Banfich, a Princeton University senior, following her 13th-place finish at Friday's Notre Dame Cross Country Invitational.

The Plymouth native, who captured three high school state cross country titles and five track championships while running for Culver Girls Academy, had been considered one of the favorites to win the prestigious women's blue division.

And midway through the soggy 5,000-meter race on the University of Notre Dame's golf course, Banfich was running among the top five, looking for an opening to move up.

With about a half-mile to go, however, somebody handed her a piano. She slipped backwards and finished in 17:19.

Winner Silje Fjortoft of Southern Methodist University clocked 16:54.

"I felt like I was in position but I couldn't hang on at the end," she said. Alex Banfich

"I feel like I'm on the verge of running well, but I'm so far behind in my training, it's taking a while."

Banfich missed part of last spring's track season with a hamstring injury, which was complicated by an illness making it difficult to breathe. She didn't begin training in the spare bedroom and she said, 'There has to be a better way.' She was looking at one of those camping chairs and said, 'What if?' So Ciao Baby was born. We also call it the portable high chair."

The reaction, "Why has no one thought of this before?" is a common one, says Baker, who notes the chair isn't just for young families, but grandparents, uncles and aunts -- a wide array of demographics.
Ciao Baby bears a strong resemblance to the camping chairs it's modeled after, but it's a fully functional high chair weighing just eight pounds ("Not much more than a lawn chair," Baker notes). A metal brace on the side allows easy folding up and placement in a very portable bag which easily straps over the wearer's shoulder.
"It's all one piece; all assembled. You pop it open, strap (the baby) in, and you're good to go. We say it's for mom's trunk and grandma's closet. It goes with you everywhere: the park, the soccer game."
Both Baker and Strong had sales and marketing backgrounds and knew how to develop a product. They filed a patent and researched their way into a working knowledge of testing children's products and the many stringent safety standards such products must meet by law.

"It took three years and 21 tries to pass all the safety standards required," she recalls. "The patent procedure took three years also...it was issued in 2007. We licensed it to a large company, but it fell through their cracks. But we had a contract, so we couldn't do anything with it. Finally in 2010, when that ended, we said, 'No one loves our product more than we do,' and decided we'll do it on our own."
The largest children's product show in America, explains Baker, has been held in Las Vegas the past several years, but when it was announced the show would move to Louisville, where Strong still lives and works, this year, Baker saw it as another of those signs too significant to be coincidence. So the two ladies signed up for the show and began building marketing materials.
At the trade show a few weekends ago, a number of retailers picked up the product, and in that one weekend, Baker and Strong took in $30,000 worth of orders, which they plan to ship when the product is ready in bulk, in January.
Interestingly, Baker says camouflage and NASCAR are the most requested patterns, so she and Strong have already been in discussions with Mossy Oak, who love the product. There's also been interest from companies in Japan and China, who would buy the product direct from manufacturers in China.

She adds the chairs will eventually be available directly off the Ciao Baby website as well, at www.theportable-highchair.com.
"We're just two people," she points out. "We take it one day at a time. We both have day jobs we both have no intentions of walking away from."
Nonetheless, Baker says they'd love to build some value and perhaps find an investor to take on the product.
"We went from zero to 60 overnight with this show," she adds. "We've been working on it so long -- now that we're 90 days away from product being available, it's kind of amazing."
"So we came back home and said, 'Wow, we need to order some product!'"
Many family and friends, she says, were unaware of this "other life" Baker has had as an entrepreneur.
"I just showed it at (the high) school last week -- they (co-workers) couldn't believe we'd been working on it all this time!

Leading organ recitalist Murray to perform at Culver

Thomas Murray

Thomas Murray, the renowned University Organist of Yale University, will present a recital on the organ Sunday, October 16, at 4 p.m., in the Memorial Chapel, on the campus of The Culver Academies.

Thomas Murray is, without question, one of America’s foremost concert organists. The American Guild of Organists named him “International Performer of the Year” in 1986, and he has performed and lectured at six national conventions of that organization. He was made an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Organists (United Kingdom) in 2005, and he was presented with the Distinguished Service Award by the Organ Historical Society in 2010. In May 2011, the American Guild of Organists arranged a special gala recital by Murray at Yale, both as a fund-raiser for the AGO Endowment Fund and to honor Murray’s lifetime achievements in the organ profession. High Fidelity magazine wrote of his “consummate skill and artistry in treating the organ as a great orchestra.”

Murray’s program will include “Concert Overture in c-minor,” by Alfred Hollins, “Rhapsody on a Breton Theme” by Camille Saint-Saëns, and “Prelude and Fugue in g-minor” by Marcel Dupré. The music of Bach will be represented by the demanding “Toccata in F,” and the major work on the program will be “Symphony No. 1 on Gregorian Themes” by Guy Weitz.

The recital is free of charge and open to the public.

Culver hosts county leadership groups

By Lydia Beers, Staff writer

CULVER — Leadership Marshall County (LMC), and Youth Leadership Marshall County, programs sponsored by the Marshall County Community Foundation (MCCF), met recently for their first full class sessions. LMC’s purpose is to help community members become leaders in Marshall County by making them aware of what the county has to offer, while YLMC focuses on youth in schools throughout the county.

Class members embarked on a day of getting to know each other at Culver Academies. John Yeager, director of Culver’s Center for Career Excellence, told the LMC group the elements needed to build a high quality connection: respectful engagement, taskenabling, and trust.

“Your commitment to this is going to make a huge difference...we hope that throughout this course you will be nudged to look at Marshall County in a different way.”

Academies staff members Sonny Adkins and Derek Perkins led the adult and youth groups -- respectively -- in several team-building activities including the ropes course.

Both LMC and YLMC will meet once a month until the end of the class in May, discussing topics such as agriculture, education and local government. One of their main goals is to develop several group projects, each of which will either enhance Marshall County or improve the LMC program.
